

---

Manitou County

SOUTH MANITOU.

Herald Correspondence.

Sabbath school was organized here Sunday, June 11th.

School opened here again June 8th, under charge of the same "school ma'am" that taught the winter term.

A number of cases of chicken-pox have been undergone here this spring. Other than that there has been no sickness here. People never get sick here. A doctor would starve.

We are very much in need of rain.

Theodore Beck has lost nine head of cattle since the snow left. They seem to be weak in the leg joints, and appear very dumpish. Others have lost stock too, having the same symptoms.

Beached June 7th, on South Manitou island, a curious looking craft, with a full set of canvas. The crew had evidently been lost, as the craft was water logged. It was found by the light-keeper, Martin Knudsen, and proved to be a mammoth kite, curiously ornamented, and attached by a long string to a large log, which it had evidently towed from some point up the lake, as it struck the island during a heavy south gale, and had on it Frankfort, Manistee and Traverse City papers.

---

Grand Traverse Herald
June 25, 1885

Manitou County South Manitou

Herald Correspondence

Sabbath school was organized here Sunday, June 11th.

School opened here again June 8th, under the same “school ma’am” that taught the winter term.

A number of cases of chicken-pox have been undergone here this spring. Other than that there has been no sickness here. People never get sick here. A doctor would starve.

We are very much in need of rain.

Theodore Beck has lost nine head of cattle since the snow left. They seem to be weak in the leg joints, and appear very dumpish. Others have lost stock too, having the same symptoms.

Beached June 7th, on South Manitou island, a curious looking craft, with a full set of canvass. The crew had evidently been lost, as the craft was water logged. It was found by light keeper, Marten Knudsen, and proved to be a mammoth kite, curiously ornamented, and attached by a long string to a large log, which it had evidently towed from some point up the lake, as it struck the island during a heavy south gale, and had on it Frankfort, Manistee and Traverse City papers.

(transcript)